

Counselor in Process, Part 2

John MacArthur

I. Introduction.

II. Gender and counseling.

A. A man is a keeper of the boundary, a teller of the story and he enters into the chaos.

B. A female counselor has to keep the boundary, but she can tell the story in her own way. She must enter into the chaos from a woman's perspective.

C. It is important for a woman to show more mercy than justice and not always be a keeper of the boundary.

III. Ideas can come from seminars, but one learns the process of change at home.

IV. We ought to encourage one another to reflect on what we are battling with in community to gain perspective.

Application questions:

1. What differences does a female counselor bring than a male counselor?

2. Why is understanding these distinctions important? Explain.

3. What process is important in growing in the battle that discipleship brings? Explain.
